Centers of Excellence - COE

In 2016, Governor Tom Wolf introduced the Centers of Excellence for Opioid Use Disorder as one solution to the growing overdose crisis within the state. The COEs were designed to engage the community to identify all persons with Opioid Use Disorder and to make sure every person with OUD achieves optimal health. This includes physical, mental, and behavioral health and social needs including job training, housing and transportation support, education services, and childcare, among others. The COEs offer a variety of services on-site, while others are made available to clients through community partners.
